AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD OF THE RETROSPECTIVE EXHIBITION
HELD AT SOUTH KENSINGTON, 1896.

N venturing to place before the public this illustrated record of the Retrospective Exhibition of 1896, we are actuated by the following objects :—

1. To preserve in permanent form, for the immediate use of art masters, teachers, students, designers, modellers, draughtsmen, and art workmen generally, the principal examples which compose this instructive and interesting exhibition, all of which have within the past eleven years been awarded Gold and Silver Medals by the Department of Science and Art.

2. To effect a direct connection between the art student and the manufacturer, by providing the latter with a handy means of reference, and be to them an indication of the best exponents of the particular kind of art work they demand.

3. To visibly demonstrate and record the growth and progress of our art schools and English practical art in general.

The progress of practical art, particularly at the present time, offers one of the most interesting studies of the day. On all sides we hear discussed the merits and demerits of technical education, how and in what way it is to affect our workmen, our manufacturers, our art schools: even our daily comforts are to be influenced! And as the art school has been, and is, the vitalising stimulus to the technical education movement of to-day, it is opportune that the Retrospective Exhibition at South Kensington which was organised

was organized by the Department of Science and Art, and opened in July 1896, should, by a work of this nature, be commemorated as of the greatest interest, usefulness, and necessity.

The great interest taken by Her Majesty the Queen, and the late Prince Consort, in the development of Art in this country, renders the publication of this work in the sixtieth year of her reign, and following upon an international commemoration of the longest reign of any English sovereign, one of peculiar significance and interest, and offers another tribute to Her Majesty's wisdom when, in November 1852, in a speech at the opening of Parliament, she stated that "The advancement of the fine arts and of practical science will be readily recognised by you as worthy the attention of a great and enlightened nation. I have directed that a comprehensive scheme shall be laid before you, having in view the promotion of these objects, towards which I invite your aid and co-operation." The policy thus indicated took form in the creation of the Department of Science and Art in the following year.

A brief retrospect of the origin of our art schools and classes will probably be of interest, and by its introduction in these notes the growth and progress will be better understood.

In the year 1835, in response to a motion proposed in the House of Commons by Mr. William Ewart, M.P. for Liverpool, a select committee was appointed, and in 1836, on the reappointment of the committee, the establishment of schools of design was recommended.

As a result of this recommendation, the Treasury voted £1500 for the establishment of a normal school of design, which was opened in Somerset House on the 1st of June, 1837.

In 1841 the Government decided to assist in the formation and maintenance of schools of design in the manufacturing centres, and voted an annual grant for this purpose.

In 1851-52 there were seventeen branch schools, and in the latter year the Managing Council was abolished, and in its place was created a Department of Practical Art, which, on the addition of a science division a year later, changed its title to that of the Department of Science and Art.

Constitutional changes continued to be made, the principal one being the amalgamation of the Education and Science and Art Departments in 1856. Previous to this change the Department of Science and Art was under the direction of the Board of Trade. On the amalgamation of the two establishments, they were placed under the Lord President of the Council, a Vice-President, and a Committee of the Council on Education.

In 1857 the Department took up its abode at South Kensington, having removed from Marlborough House, where, on leaving Somerset House in 1852, it had been located. At the time of its removal to South Kensington there were 12,509 students receiving instruction in local schools of Art, and 396 at the National Art Training School, whereas only 6,997 students attended the schools of design previous to the establishment of the Department. The official report shows that in 1895 there were 136,768 receiving instruction in our art schools and classes.

In arranging the Retrospective Exhibition, the Department at once hit upon the best method of showing the value of its organisation and work, and to disprove that oft-repeated fallacy—the supremacy in Art of our Continental neighbours. Work for work, and school for school, it will be difficult indeed to verify the statements which we hear so easily and airily made about the quality of the practical art work of our country as compared with that of France and Germany.

In this publication, as in the Exhibition itself, the value and progress of the art teaching in our schools of art is shown in actuality; devoid of all embellishments, each work is exhibited on its merits.

The effect on the student of the perpetuation of the Exhibition will be most valuable, and for years to come, consciously or otherwise, its influence will assert itself.

On the art master and teacher the suggestive usefulness will be apparent in our national competitions. Birth will be given to new and enlarged ideas, a better understanding with the work done and the work to do, an enlightenment as to the strength and weakness of their individual positions, and an encouraging stimulus in that the labour they are called upon to undertake is surely and rapidly building for this country a national art, which by its purity and simplicity will in years to come demonstrate the supremacy of English practical art.

To the manufacturer, it will be difficult to overestimate the value of this collection of art work. In other exhibitions good and bad are so intermingled that debased examples unfortunately leave an impression which almost, if not entirely, obliterates the simpler æsthetic qualities which are alone the properties of pure art.

To the designer, on whom the manufacturer has to depend for his original ideas, the influence must be far-reaching and acceptable, and should tend, as it were, to weld together the artist and the manufacturer into one enlightened person, working and striving for the advancement of the beautiful and the practical.

It is, however, in the interest of the students that this lasting memorial of the Retrospective Exhibition has been undertaken. They are, or soon will be, the art workmen on whom so much will depend. If English Art is to be universally acknowledged as a fact, if supremacy is to be obtained and retained, it is the art student, by his thorough knowledge, his enthusiasm, and his desire for the best, and nothing but the best, that will accomplish it.
